

Here I show a selection of works.

Works that collage postmodernism, discuss architecture, imitate mechanisms of representation in the public and the media space. Works that love the publicity and economy of the urban space. And music.

Schlechte Laune ohne Kiosk und Küche (Bad Mood Without a Kiosk and Kitchen)

Sculptures

Künstlerhaus Vienna / AT , 2020

Mestna Galerija Ljubljana / SI, 2021

Kunstverein Siegen / DE, 2024

Lara, Luisa, and Juliana are benches arranged to create the atmosphere of a public square. Each sitting surface is body-length, unobstructed by armrests or other hostile, anti-sleeping embellishments. Figurative elements support all three—arms, feet, and breasts. As others approach, the sculptures exaggerate, mirror, and cement visitor body parts within their exteriors. The group encourages citizens to use space, calling their friends to sleep, to smoke, to hang out, to socialize. In that same spirit, beyond seating, they are a stage for a sound performance by the artist Juliana Lindenhofer.

Domesticity and femininity metamorphose into infrastructure, a category restrictively limited to masculine manifestations. Lara, Luisa, and Juliana confidently assert their public nature, fashioned from durable, heavy materials. Their only decorations are traces of utility. An ashtray perched on top of one sculpture is a memory, a forgotten age of communal space, an excuse to congregate. Imprinted in the pavement-pedestals are remains of footprints, discarded chewing gum, scuff marks, and dirt. Pigment-soaked concrete replicates the texture of fabric, and glossy paint adorns the surfaces like makeup. Another sculpture, Romana, features a triumphal column standing for urbanity, diversity, and anti-romanticism. (Maruša Sagadin)

B-Girls, Go!

Sculpture in public space
KÖR, Vienna / AT, 2018

Several centuries of masculine-dominated, gendered urbanism conditioned you, perhaps, to understand public art strictly as commemorative or decorative. You might regard other sculptures as either aesthetic baubles or heroic gestures—precious objects deposited from above to validate its location, a building, a neighbourhood, a city.

*Not this. Here is your lucky cap. Fold it over, curve the brim, and keep it close. It is your faithful companion.
From now on, all you experience together belongs only to you both.*

Rather than memorialise teenage subculture as an historic moment or static model to follow, Sagadin recognises its perpetuation, knowing trends never stand still. 'B-Boys' are male teenage hip-hop dancers and street artists whose shorthand name reinforces the deeply gendered dynamics present even in emerging culture. In contrast, Sagadin builds a brilliantly coloured, oversized metal baseball cap dedicated to all the female and genderqueer teenagers. (JL Murtaugh)

I lived on the top floor of Ernő Goldfinger's brutalist icon, Balfron Tower for a few years and a rumour pervaded the building while I lived there. The rumour was that Goldfinger had the idea to take a street from the ground and lay it like a template onto a floor of the Tower. A street became a floor. So if you took Andrew Street from the ground, where, Mrs Smith lived next to the Singhs' and in turn they lived next to the Follleys'. These people and their tethered neighbour relations were lifted from the street to a single floor in the Tower. Now Andrew Street became floor 21 say and still Mrs Smith lived next to the Singhs' and in turn they lived next to the Follleys'. The thing is, because of the design of the interior of the tower, the chains of connection no longer simply went left and right as they did on the ground. They were not laid 1:1 like in Borges'1 tale, well in appearance yes but in truth not quite. Goldfinger left the surface image of the building intact but he folded the unseen meta-structure inside. In essence he sort of, hacked the expected code within the building machine.

Terra Cotta, Panna Cotta

Installation

Syndicate, Cologne / DE, 2016

curated by JL Murtaugh

Terra Cotta, Panna Cotta begins by infusing canonical decorative traditions with Sagadin's characteristic semiotic humor.

Saturated with playful, rehydrated neoclassical and postmodern details, the show's aesthetic signatures have as much in common with retro-couture clothing as the implied architectures – a liberal blend of pop culture, graphic, comedic, and anatomic influences. However, the resulting objects do not comfortably reside within any of these categories, constantly changing with each exhibition. Sagadin's primary material is a malleable and personal language which feints toward function, durability, and timelessness.

The exhibition partially functions as a second-act evolution of Doris, Ionic, Iconic, her exhibition at SPACE, London this past Spring, which featured indoor and outdoor benches representing that show's title. In this setting, the sculpture now becomes a central, theatrical character. The reclining, pantomime caryatid on its union-mandated break masquerades vainly as street furniture to disguise its metamorphosis. The surface-mounted prop cosmetic (first appearing as an outdoor installation in London) might mean the character has rested in place too long, or suggest a designer's quirky presentation of a model big-budget skyscraper.

Sagadin's surrounding wall objects start with standard foam insulation material in the manufacturer's proprietary color, which is excavated to admit a rough concrete mix. The process simulates the pouring of structural foundations, but onto a permeable, branded ground which assumes an advertisement-like profile when hung upright. These are supplemented with an installation of posters and research material fly-posted at the edges, the mossy origins of the puzzling drama creeping back into view.

Doris Ionic Iconic

Installation

SPACE, London / UK, 2016

curated by Persilia Caton

Maruša Sagadin's Doris Ionic Iconic includes a public bench-like sculpture in front of SPACE Mare Street and in the gallery, a smaller sculpture for sitting on and a series of wall works. The project refers to architectural and bodily forms in combination with post-modern colour palettes and graffiti fonts to make visible a choreographed contemporary urban language.

Highly aware of her architectural predecessors, the artist plays off distinctly historical and contemporary forms and their associated classifications. By renaming the Doric column Doris, Sagadin shifts the concept of support structure to a gendered context. Collapsing the space between the Ionic column and Zaha Hadid's iconic architectural wave form, Sagadin's resulting sculptural mash-ups move swiftly between a stadium fashioned into a pair of platform shoes or a skyscraper depicted as a tube of lipstick. Brought together with foundational architectural elements, these associations highlight strength and visibility. The project as a whole reflects numerous perspectives from the general commercialisation of urban space to personal desires, consumer urges and experiences of the individual resident.

Meet The Residents (Brothers and Sisters, Freundschaften gibt ´s nur auf Augenhöhe)

Installation

Exhibit, Academy of Fine Arts Vienna, / AT, 2014

Kunsthalle Exnergasse, Vienna / AT, 2014

With her installation Meet The Residents, Maruša Sagadin relates to specific fragments from the right interior wing of Bosch ´s Last Judgement triptych, while she simultaneously looks at the city and the variety of its residents. As a peculiar cabaret, her three-dimensional mise-en-scène seems to loosely reminisce on the Vienna cabaret Die Hölle (The Heel, 1906-1937), an example of an (also literal) underground counterculture to Vienna ´s high and court culture. The self-empowerment project of a counterculture is conceived more abstract here, though. If power can be defined as a quantity or order and self-pity does not offer an option for resistance, a counterpower strategy might consist in staging oneself as big, too. This could have been exactly what the underground band The Residents did when they presented themselves as no less than alternative Beatles on the cover of their album in 1974.

For this installation, I first wrote a text that I then recorded on a vinyl forty-five in form of a rap performance. The record player is situated in a kind of table structure which represents a simplified skyline of the Viennese ‚Donaucity‘, but, regarding its steel and wood construction and the curbed tube of the loudspeaker, is also a reference to the surfaces of today’s architecture. The text and the shape of the installation relate to the Vienna Towers, towers of 220 and 160 meters high which are supposed to form a distinctive landmark in the Viennese ‚Donau-City‘ and are currently designed by the French star architect Perrault.

Auf der rechten Seite der Reichsbrücke bzw. Überführung der Donauuferautobahn vor Kaiserbrunn, plante der aus Wien stammende australische Architekt Harry Seidler, ein Geschäfts- und Wohnhochhaus, ein Entertainment Centre und einen Wohnpark. Dem 32-stöckigen Hochhaus ein erweitertes Prisma zugrunde, die beiden Eingangsgeschosse mit zentraler Halle und weitem Erschließungskern sind für öffentliche Nutzungen vorgesehen. Ein siebenstöckiger Leberberg Büro, die beiden Wohnbauten, 2 größeren Wohnungen und schließlich Spiel- und Pflanzhöfen auslaufen. Die fünfläufige Kanarierkai ein Entertainmentcenter. Der anschließende Wohnpark mit sieben, je mehrgeschossigen Wohnbauten ist schräg zur Donau auf die Autobahnüberführung gestellt, um die Last verteilt abzutragen. Zwei Geschosse wurden dadurch gewonnen, so hat jede Wohnung Aussicht zum Fluss. Die leichten, plastisch-organisch durchgebildeten Wohnbauten enthalten zwischen 54 und 130 m² groß meist Drei- und Vierspänner um einen Erschließungskern. Die Stimmwände schmückt ein Gold-Kunstwerk von Lin Utzon. Städtebaulicher Charakter des Ensembles ist eine neue Volks- und Hauptschule, deren transparentes Rückgrat - mit Sport- und Gemeinschaftseinrichtungen - zwischen den Häusern vermittelt. Vier auskragende Zeilen belichten orthogonal die Klassenzimmer.

On the right hand side of the Danube and of the Kaiserbrunn the Australian (Vienna born) architect, Harry Seidler planned a commercial and residential high-rise building, an entertainment centre and a residential park. The 32 storey high tower is based in plan on a prism. The two entrance levels with a central hall and vertical circulation cores are planned for public use. A seven storey wing contains offices, the two other wings accommodate studio apartments at this level and above larger apartments terminating in semi level terraces. The edge at the foot of the building is defined by an entertainment centre. The residential park with seven storey apartment buildings is placed on the slope.
